“The United States Military has a long history of aspiring to model itself like a microcosm of the nation it serves, evolving to match societal shifts in the U.S. such as de-segregation, which President Eisenhower instated in the military in the 1950’s. Today, our nation is in the middle of another societal reckoning as the Black Lives Matter movement demands we examine and right the wrongs systemically perpetrated against Black Americans. As an aspiring military officer who may be asked to ensure the U.S. Military evolves alongside the nation, what changes do you believe the United States must make to create equity for Black Americans, how should these changes be reflected in the military, and how as a military officer would you handle issues of racism and prejudice amongst fellow service members?”
